THE FEDERAL EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

The Federal Executive Council is the executive body of the Federal Assembly, the equivalent of a cabinet. The FEC president (in effect, the prime minister) is nominated by the collective state Presidency and approved by the Federal Assembly for a nonrenewable four-year term. The vice presidents and members (consisting of federal secretaries (in effect, ministers), presidents of federal committees, and others without portfolios) are selected by the FEC president and approved by the Federal Assembly. They usually cannot serve more than two consecutive four-year terms. Under each person's name is the republic or province he or she represents.
